

When two generations of homeschoolers graduate with honors from Oxford University, you have to ask the obvious question: “Why are homeschoolers thriving, and public schoolers failing?”

Oxford and Cambridge Universities are ranked as the best education systems in the world; even though students only spend a portion of their time in class. They are independent learners that meet with teachers in small groups to talk in-depth about the course’s content, which is then used for self-directed study. Education is personalized. (Homeschooling uses similar teaching methods.)

The Reformed Education System will have “Conversations” with Teachers tutorials that supplement classroom instruction to help students achieve their full academic potential. There will also be “Buddies” — students knowledgeable about course content that help other students learn.
